1 Mark is training to be a top athlete, so he knows it's important to start the day with a good breakfast. He usually has some fruit, for example melon, along with some cereal and eggs. He doesn't usually have toast. In fact, he doesn't eat much bread at all.
 2 Every day, he arrives at the training field at about 9:15. He gets changed and then has to do a special exercise to make his arms and legs warm. It's very dangerous to run around without preparing your body first. His coach starts the training session at about ten o'clock, and with an hour break for lunch at one, he trains until four. He gets very tired, but it'll be worth it.
 3 At the moment, he can run 100 meters in ten seconds, but he knows that he must improve to compete at the top level. Mark says: "There have always been good athletes from the U.S.A. and Jamaica, but who knows where the good runners will come from in future: with better training, my future rivals could come from anywhere."
 4 As far as hobbies go, Mark admits that playing sports is the last thing he wants to do after a hard day's training. While his friends like to go and play basketball and soccer, Mark is perfectly happy spending time in the kitchen trying out a new recipe. He's actually a pretty good cook.

Liam: Hi, Tara. What are you doing?
 Tara: Hi, Liam. I'm looking at a website about elephants. Everyone loves elephants, but some people are killing them. It's terrible. I think elephants will be extinct in 50 years.
 Liam: I disagree. There are lots of environmental organizations that are helping wild animals now. I'm sure there will be elephants in 50 years.
 Tara: I'm sorry, but I don't agree with you. There are only about 600,000 elephants in the whole of Africa. This website says that African elephants will probably be extinct in 30 years.
 Liam: I see your point, but organizations like the WWF are trying to save the elephants.
 Tara: That's true. But I think we all need to do something to help.
 Liam: You're right. Let's look online and see what we can do.
