A (Track 18)

- Dee* Hi, Mark. You look extremely happy.
- Mark* I am, Dee! I'm going to go to New Orleans next month.
- Dee* That sounds exciting. Are you visiting family in New Orleans?
- Mark* Oh, no. My aunt used to live in New Orleans, but she doesn't anymore.
- Dee* I see. So why are you going?
- Mark* Well, I've always wanted to go there. They have great jazz music in New Orleans, and I love jazz. I was going to go about 10 years ago, but the city was hit by an extremely powerful hurricane.
- Dee* I remember that.
- Mark* Yeah, it was sort of devastating. And I just never got around to going after that.
- Dee* Well, that's great that you're going to go now. I bet it's an interesting city. I've never really thought about going there before.
- Mark* I can't wait! I'll tell you all about it when I get back.

B (Track 19)

- Jack* Hey, Wendy. Look at this.
- Wendy* Wow! That's amazing, Jack. What is it, exactly?
- Jack* It's an everything remote! You can use it for your TV, your radio, and even your computer!
- Wendy* I guess that's convenient for other people, but I don't really watch TV or listen to the radio. Hey, look at this.
- Jack* What could that be for?
- Wendy* It says what it is right here. It's a battery pack for your cell phone.
- Jack* That's amazing! It's extremely small.
- Wendy* I know. And it gives your cell phone enough power to work for 72 hours.
- Jack* That's great. Has your phone ever died when you really needed it?
- Wendy* No, not really. Has yours?
- Jack* All the time! It's really annoying! Just last week I had plans to meet a friend. And, well, I couldn't find the restaurant. I wanted to call him, but my cell phone died.
- Wendy* That's too bad. What happened?
- Jack* Well, someone finally let me borrow her phone. But by the time I called my friend, he had already left the restaurant.
- Wendy* Oh, no! Was he angry with you?
- Jack* No. He was frustrated, but he's pretty laid-back, and he got over it.
- Wendy* Well, I think you need one of these battery packs.
- Jack* I sure do! I'm going to get one.
